For whom the ringtone tolls

Crime. People and their smartphones are quick to be parted in Toronto, where police have seen a massive spike in thefts and robberies

Khalid Mohamed was on a deserted downtown subway platform around 10 at night when a man approached him with a knife and said, "Gimme your phone."

The Grade 12 student at William Lyon McKenzie says he didn't hesitate.

Mohamed handed over the year-old smartphone, purchased with money he'd saved from his part-time job, to his assailant, who then pushed him to the ground and took off at a run.

The teen chased him but gave up after watching the man jump a turnstile at the St. Patrick Station and disappear.

Unfortunately, Mohamed's story isn't unique.

A Torstar News Service investigation has found more than 30,000 cellphones have been reported stolen to Toronto police over a 10-year period, during which time the total number stolen increased nearly 400 per cent.

Thefts went from 840 in 2004 to 3,190 in 2013 as of Sept. 24, the latest data available from police. Robberies, which are thefts with violence, went from 338 to 1,257 during the same time period.

Police say the likely targets are teenagers, often as young as 13.

Nearly a third of all phones are taken during robberies.

Police say it's too early to know if a blacklist created last September has been successful in deterring the crime in Toronto, where thefts and robberies were on the upswing in 2012, despite the number of stolen phones going down nationwide.

High-theft zone

- Nearly a fifth of all thefts and robberies have been in the city's core. Police say that's due to the high volume of people coming downtown for work, or to restaurants and nightclubs where the thefts can occur.
- That high-theft area runs from Spadina east to Yonge, and south from Bloor to the waterfront, and includes five of the city's 144 neighbourhoods: University, Chinatown-Kensington, the Waterfront Communities and the Island, and the Yonge-Church and Bay Street corridors.

Local Venezuelans protest violence in home country

Taking to the streets. Demonstrations in the South American nation have turned deadly

Members of Toronto's Venezuelan community took to Yonge-Dundas Square Sunday afternoon to draw attention to the protests in their country this week that have resulted in the deaths of at least three student activists.

Anti-government demonstrators took to the streets in the South American country this week over a stubbornly rampant crime rate, out-of-control inflation and shortages of basic goods.

Greg Acuna, a 21-year-old Venezuelan studying in Toronto, has a friend who hasn't been seen for 24 hours. He is among the scores of protestors who have been arrested. Acuna, who has been in touch with his friend's family, said he's being denied basic rights like speaking with relatives or lawyers.

"We know they're in prison we don't know where," said Acuna, who helped organize the protest which started on a Facebook page for local Venezuelans.

Five people, including Acuna, laid down on the street as others drew chalk outlines around them. The crowd of about 25 spoke with passersby about the situation unfolding in their home country.

"We're not supporting any politician. We are supporting students and the freedom Venezuelans should have regardless of their political view," said Acuna. "Government should be afraid of the people, not the other way around."

President Nicolás Maduro has laid the blame on opposition leader Leopoldo López and issued a warrant for his arrest, resulting in a manhunt that has so far been unsuccessful. Maduro also ceased subway and bus service to the Chacao area of Caracas, the country's capital, where the protests have been centred.

The five bodies are designed to symbolize five people killed this week. Three were confirmed killed during the protest. This weekend, two religious figures were killed — a 79-year-old priest and an 84-year-old layperson who both worked at a religious school, underscoring concerns about the high crime rate.

Andres Masowski, a 31-year-old who laid on the Toronto sidewalk as part of the protest, has many friends and family still in Venezuela. "We have reached a point where all our basic products, like food, milk, flour, toilet paper, cooking oil, those are basic things for the diet of anyone around the world, you cannot find them," he said. "If you find them there are organized gangs and groups that take those goods out of the supermarket and create a black market outside."

Blacklist impacts sales of used cellphones

A young man checks his smartphone. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS FILE

Samsung smartphones and iPhones are neatly displayed in the glass counters in Peter Kugan's Markham Road shop.

Before the end of September, anyone could come in and sell Kugan a phone or pay to have him unlock one so that it can be connected to any wireless carrier instead of just the one it was originally purchased from.

But that ended when the Canadian Wireless Telecommunications Association launched its blacklist of stolen phones in the fall.

Quoted

"I don't think these people are stealing the phones. They're buying them online."

Peter Kugan, cellphone retailer

Now, when a phone is reported stolen, the carrier will put the phone's International Mobile Equipment Identity number on the national blacklist. Service will be cut and other Canadian carriers won't reconnect it.

Kugan says he only buys used phones from a trusted wholesaler and turns away at least five customers a day who want phones unlocked.

"I don't unlock them. I tell them go to the website," says Kugan, referring to protectyourdata.ca, the CWTA website that allows users to check up to two IMEI numbers a day against the list. "They don't come back.

"I don't think these people are stealing the phones. They're buying them online," says Kugan. "And when they call the number of the guy they bought it from, the phone is turned off. The seller knows it's a stolen phone and the buyer is going to call back." TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

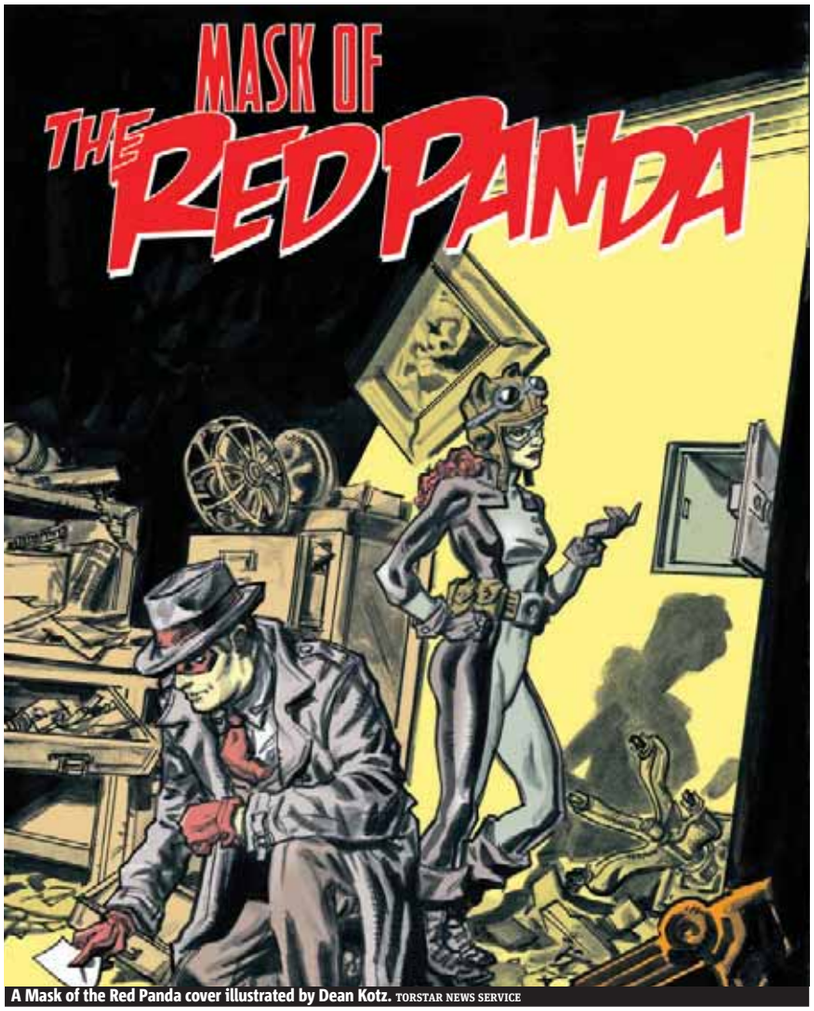
Meet Toronto's Terrific Twosome



A Mask of the Red Panda cover illustrated by Dean Kotz. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

Mask of the Red Panda.
New comic chronicles exciting adventures of masked crime fighters during city's 'dark and desperate' period

After months of defending Torontonians in the pages of his digital comic book, the tales of Toronto's mysterious masked defender has officially hit store shelves.

Created by Gregg Taylor and illustrated by Dean Kotz, Mask of the Red Panda centres around August Fenwick, a billionaire who brings his own brand of justice to Depression-era Toronto as the Red Panda.

Presented in the classic pulp fiction style of the 1930s and '40s, Fenwick fights crime in a suit and hat with a red domino mask alongside his love-stricken driver-turned-sidekick Katya "Kit" Baxter, better known by her crime-fighting alias, The Flying Squirrel.

Using their mastery of hand-to-hand combat and a variety of gadgets, the duo, commonly referred to as the Terrific Twosome of Toronto, dedicate their time keeping the city safe from gangsters, gunmen and, of course, supervillains, all of whom are hell-bent on exploiting the disaster-stricken people of Canada's largest city.

"As it was common in heroes in the period, (Fenwick) was the wealthy man who played the fool while he was trying to protect those who couldn't protect themselves," said Taylor. "(At the time, people) didn't think in terms of a man with powers, they thought in terms of a man with wealth, a man with means who would use his power instead of to exploit people, (but) to save them."

Originally published online via MonkeyBrain Comics, Mask of the Red Panda was acquired by California-based IDW Publishing in December.

Consisting of the series' first four digital comics, it was released earlier this month in a limited print run across both Canada and the United States.

"It's a great type of noir approach. We like the style, we like the creative and it felt like it would be a great addition to our trade line," said Jeff Webber, IDW's director of e-publishing. "I don't think it's so locked into being a Canadian story specifically, but I think it'll have a broad audience in the U.S. as well."

For Taylor, a 42-year-old Torontonian who now lives in Hamilton, setting the Red Panda's adventures during the Depression was more than just an ode to the classic pulp heroes he read growing up — such as Walter B. Gibson's The Shadow or Will Eisner's The Spirit — but to also serve as a reminder of a forgotten part of our history.

"It's very easy for us to forget how dark and desperate this period was, and when you read popular fiction of that period it's clear that everyone knew someone who had been destroyed by the collapse of the economy," said Taylor. "(The heroes of this time) were invented because they were needed.

"It becomes something more than these spandex heroes who spend their time fighting each other when you think of it as something pop culture created because people who were consuming it needed it."

As for the future of Toronto's masked protector, Taylor says that he is open to further exploring the Red Panda's world through different media. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

Teachers' union upset about trustee's tweets

The Ontario Secondary School Teachers' Federation (OSSTF) is calling on the Toronto public board to investigate tweets by trustee Sam Sotiropoulos, alleging he has engaged in "harassing debate" with board employees, city councillors and others in posts about the Pride parade.

The trustee has been battling with people on Twitter after taking issue with nudity at the parade, which he has never personally attended. He asked Coun. Kristyn Wong-Tam, whose ward hosts the parade, seven separate times if public nudity is legal or not, and referred to Coun. Shelley Carroll as a "windbag."

Sam Sotiropoulos TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

"It's embarrassing for somebody in a position like that to take that kind of approach with his tweets to the councillor — that sort of haranguing, repeating the question over and over again — where clearly there's an underlying agenda," said Doug Jolliffe, president of the OSSTF in Toronto. "This is a typical tactic of bullies, to keep repeating some question like they've made some fantastic point."

Jolliffe called Sotiropoulos' treatment of Wong-Tam "revolting." Trustee Howard Kaplan also weighed in on Twitter, saying, "trustee Sam's comments appall me."

A very small number of participants in the annual parade are nude.

Parking. Drivers won't get 10-minute grace period until bylaw changes: Cops

Police say they are willing to grant a 10-minute grace period for parking tickets if the city changes its existing bylaw to include the policy.

The city's management committee is set to discuss an amendment to the parking enforcement bylaw next week that would exempt drivers from being ticketed if their pay-and-display receipt is less than 10 minutes past its expiration.

Council passed a similar motion in July 2012, but police continued their policy of observing only a five-minute grace period.

According to Kimberly Rossi, commander of Toronto police's Parking Enforcement Unit, this is because the bylaw was never changed.

"When the city makes a motion, that does not necessarily change the law," she said. "The existing bylaw does not provide a grace period at all."

Rossi said a review by the chief of police last year found that "if the city wanted to enact a 10-minute grace period, then they should incorporate that into the bylaw."

If the city does decide to change the bylaw, police would allow for a longer grace period, she said.

For the sake of fairness and to account for any time discrepancies on cellphones and watches, parking enforcement officers do give drivers a five-minute grace period before issuing tickets, Rossi said.

Coming out. Actress announced she was gay during her speech at the Time to Thrive conference in Las Vegas on Friday

DESERIE MURPHY
For Metro in Halifax

Lil MacPherson has been close friends with Ellen Page for close to a decade and says she was proud and tearful while watching the Halifax actress announce she is gay.

A Hollywood star known for her work in Juno, X-Men and other blockbusters, Page announced her sexuality during a speech at the Time to Thrive conference on Valentine's Day night in Las Vegas.

"It was perfect timing," said MacPherson, owner of the Wooden Monkey, a restaurant in downtown Halifax. "They encouraged her. To stand amongst people that have gone through the same struggles, they understand her and she understands them."

MacPherson says Page is an incredible actress who has earned her wings. She also thinks her decision to come out will only impact her positively.

"It's more important for her to be who she is, instead of living a lie. She said she couldn't do it anymore," said MacPherson. "Nova Scotia should be proud, that's our little gem."

Page told the crowd she was gay by the end of her eight-minute speech, saying she feels a personal obligation and a social responsibility to make a difference and help others have an easier and more hopeful time.

Social media has been rife with reaction towards Page's announcement, including from her friend and Raising Hope actress, Shannon Woodward, who tweeted "I have never been more proud of a human than I am of @EllenPage right now."

Other Hollywood celebrities, including Kate Mara, Anna Kendrick and Jesse Tyler Ferguson also offered their support for Page, with the latter tweeting, "Love love LOVE @EllenPage & the message she sent out today! What a perfect way to end Valentines Day! (sic)"

MacPherson isn't disclosing how long she's known Page was gay but says she wasn't shocked by the announcement.

Voting rights. U.S. lawyer warns Canada about changing voter ID rules

A participant in the bruising American battle over voting rights warns that Canada is treading on dangerous ground with its proposed electoral reforms.

One of the lawyers who helped strike down the voter ID law in Pennsylvania last month says legislation tabled by the Harper government will inevitably wind up depriving some people of their voting rights.

The Canadian bill would still allow 39 types of ID. Legislation would simply get rid of the practice where one voter can vouch for another one's identity. In Canada, chief electoral officer Marc Mayrand says the end of vouching would affect more than 100,000 voters. They come from different walks of life: young people who move around a lot, aboriginals with no formal papers proving their on-reserve address, and elderly people who have just moved into retirement homes.

Climate change. Kerry tells deniers to wake up

Climate change may be the world's "most fearsome" weapon of mass destruction and urgent global action is needed to combat it, U.S. Secretary of State John Kerry said on Sunday, comparing those who deny its existence or question its causes to people who insist the Earth is flat.

In a speech to Indonesian students, civic leaders and government officials in Jakarta, Kerry laid into climate change skeptics, accusing them of using shoddy science and scientists to delay measures needed to reduce emissions of greenhouse gases at the risk of imperiling the planet. He also went after those who dispute who is responsible for such emissions, arguing that everyone and every country must take responsibility and act immediately.

Can you hear me now ... in prison? Contraband cellphones on the rise

They're hidden in babies' diapers, ramen noodle soup packages, footballs, soda cans and even body cavities.

Not drugs or weapons, but cellphones. They're becoming a growing problem in prisons across America as they are used to make threats, plan escapes and for inmates to continue to make money from illegal activity even while behind bars.

"You can pick states all across the country and you'll see everything from hits being ordered on individuals to criminal enterprises being run from inside institutions with cellphones," said Michael Crews, head of Florida's Department of Corrections.

When two murderers serving life sentences escaped from Florida Panhandle prison last fall, a search of their cells turned up a cellphone used to help plan the getaway, drawing attention to the burgeoning problem. It was just one of 4,200 cellphones confiscated by prison officials last year, or 11 per day.

"The scary part is, if we found 4,200, we know that's not all of them," Crews said.

And while prison officials are trying their best to keep cellphones out, it's not such an easy task. Jamming cellphone signals is prohibited by federal law, and it costs more than $1 million each for authorized towers that control what cellphone calls can come in and out of prisons. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Craigslist suspect: I killed at least 22 others

Jailhouse interview. 19-year-old claims she committed murders across the U.S. as part of satanic cult

A woman charged along with her newlywed husband with killing a man they met through Craigslist admitted to the slaying in a jailhouse interview with a newspaper and said she has killed more than 20 other people across America, claims which police said they are investigating.

In an interview with The Daily Item in Sunbury, Pa., 19-year-old Miranda Barbour said she wants to plead guilty to killing Troy LaFerrara in November. She also said in the interview she has killed at least 22 others from Alaska to North Carolina in the last six years as part of her involvement in a satanic cult.

"I feel it is time to get all of this out. I don't care if people believe me. I just want to get it out," Barbour told the newspaper for a story published Saturday night.

Sunbury police Chief Steve Mazzeo told the newspaper that investigators were aware of Miranda Barbour's claims of involvement in other murders. He said they are "seriously concerned" and have contacted police in other jurisdictions.

In a statement issued Sunday, the FBI's Philadelphia division said it had been in contact with Sunbury police and "will offer any assistance requested in the case." THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Court proceedings

Miranda Barbour's attorney asked a judge last week to toss out statements she made before she was charged. Public defender Ed Greco said in the motion that Barbour wasn't afforded an attorney despite repeated requests during two police interviews.

- Barbour said in the jailhouse interview that she wanted to plead guilty at her arraignment, but that Greco pleaded not guilty for her.

Boldly drawing homes for life on Mars

Where no one has gone before. Calgary artist designing conceptual habitats for a one-way mission to the red planet

Bryan Versteeg hasn't stopped drawing ever since he got his first crayons and left marks all over the walls as a child — all the while dreaming of someday living in space.

He still remembers that sketch books and drawing pencils were the predominant gifts on his fifth and sixth birthdays.

So began the career of the 38-year-old Calgary space artist who's becoming known for his futuristic out-of-this-world illustrations.

Warp forward to Versteeg's recent illustrations of what a human habitat on Mars would eventually look like. His Mars One conceptual designs have appeared in thousands of articles on the Internet.

Versteeg started working on the Martian space habitat after he was approached by the founders of the Mars One Foundation, which is planning a one-way mission to the red planet.

In December, the non-profit organization selected 75 Canadians to enter the second round of the mission's selection process. The 43 Canadian women and 32 men were among 1,058 candidates selected.

Versteeg is enthusiastic about the mission: "I really believe in Mars settlement and colonization as a foothold for human beings on another planet." THE CANADIAN PRESS

Sochi. The essential thing is not to have conquered, but to have tweeted ads well?

Between photos and insights about their Olympic experience, some Olympians are turning over their social media accounts to sponsors, agreeing to quotas of postings on Twitter and Facebook and letting other people send commercial messages in their name.

The agents for U.S. figure skaters Ashley Wagner and Gracie Gold both say sponsors draft some of their tweets, plugging their brands.

"This is the first Olympics where I actually have a social media calendar, where an athlete has to tweet or mention something on a given day," Gold's agent, Yuki Saegusa, said in an interview.

"We get a list of tweets or social media things that need to be posted and then we approve them for her," said Saegusa, senior vice-president for Olympic clients at sports management giant IMG.

Although they "encourage" Gold to post the pre-packaged commercial tweets to her 65,000 followers herself, sometimes others do it for her.

"We want it to be from her point of view, and from her mouth and from her fingers. So we try to get her to do them — mostly," Saegusa said.

"We're in a very new age now where a lot of advertising, or PR, or promotions, is social media. That's becoming a very important aspect of marketing."

Wagner's IMG agent, David Baden, said athletes' sponsorship deals are now starting to specify "how many tweets, how many Facebook mentions and even Instagram" photos they must post.

OF ICE AND ACCESSIBILITY

URBAN COMPASS

Matt Elliott
toronto@metronews.ca

I talked to a neighbour the other day about Toronto's icy streets. It's a common topic of conversation these days, ever since the Christmas ice storm turned our sidewalks into something resembling the Sochi bobsled track.

Our experiences have been different, my neighbour and I. I'm a young-ish guy without mobility challenges. She often walks with a cane. For me, the icy sidewalks are frustrating. For her, they're something much worse — they're dangerous.

"I feel like I'm a prisoner in my own home," she told me.

My neighbour's experience has been amplified because she and I live in downtown Toronto, where the city doesn't clear sidewalks of ice and snow.

Property owners downtown are supposed to clear them themselves, but many don't — or can't. It's one of the lasting inequalities of the post-amalgamation era — the outer part of the city gets cleared sidewalks, but the core does not.

Could — or should — we change that? Toronto is certainly not unique in its approach to sidewalk snow clearing — Chicago and New York have similar policies — but it's fair to wonder if we can't do better.

Last December, Toronto's Transportation Services department authored a report that touched on the issue. The report notes that the provincial government doesn't mandate any standards for sidewalk snow clearing and, anyway, it's not really possible to use a machine to clear sidewalks less than 1.5-metres wide.

There are some reasons to question that conclusion — we have robot vacuum cleaners and hologram Tupcas but no one can design a snow-clearing machine for narrow sidewalks? — but let's set that aside and jump right to the bottom line.

Because they don't have a machine that could clear downtown sidewalks, staff peg the cost of clearing all sidewalks at an extra $9.9 million per year.

That's definitely not chump change, but there are a few ways to look at it. If the city were to pay for the service with property taxes, it'd add about 0.4 per cent to the average residential tax bill. On a dollar basis, that'd mean about an extra ten dollars for most households.

On one hand, nobody likes paying more taxes, and there are a lot of services competing for more funding. On the other hand, cleared sidewalks for ten bucks? That might be a pretty great deal.

It's not a simple issue, but it's an increasingly important one. We're finally starting to recognize accessibility as a human right. Over the next decade, the TTC will spend billions to makes its platforms and subway stations accessible. But what's the benefit of all that spending if people like my neighbour don't even feel safe walking on city sidewalks? What's accessibility really worth? In our slippery city, that's a question worth asking.

0 brother, where art thou?

Long-lost sibling seen in exhibit

It had been nearly 12 years since Bill Olsen, 60, had seen his brother. He didn't know if Bruce Sauer, who left home at 16 to pursue a career in music, was alive or dead until a Canadian Press photo feature on the Downtown Eastside was exhibited last year. A photo booth was set up for residents to pose for pictures.

Olsen recognized a grey-haired man with a beard and a patch over one eye.

"I haven't heard from my brother and there he is. I miss having him in my life," said Olsen. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Hoping to reconnect

Olsen is teaching in Nunavut, but hopes to travel to Vancouver to meet with his brother when he returns to his home in Hanna, Alta., in June.

He is desperate to reconnect. He lost touch with his sister Sharon years ago and the family didn't learn of her death until she had been buried in a pauper's grave.

"He could die without a next of kin and he would be buried ... without anybody at the funeral," Olsen said. "It was bad enough having a sister go that way." THE CANADIAN PRESS

The Wild Cub matures

Youth. Keegan DeWitt swapped indie-pop mecca Brooklyn for Nashville to collaborate and make new album

ALEXANDRA CAVALLO
Metro World News

Wild Cub's single Thunder Clatter is an ode to wife of Keegan DeWitt (far left). COURTESY WILD CUB

Most people looking to get a band off the ground move to Brooklyn. Keegan DeWitt got the hell out.

The Wild Cub front man had spent the better part of eight years living in New York, working as a composer for commercials and film soundtracks — and successfully, at that. Still, he struggled to make ends meet.

"I spent a lot of my time learning how to bankroll living in New York, which is just such a big waste of effort," he says. "I feel like I got a lot out my time there, and New York is such a fundamental part of who I am now, and it shaped me as a person a lot, but at some point, I was like, 'I'm succeeding halfway at my artistic career, and I'm only putting 50 per cent of my effort into my day job, and not being very good at that. Maybe I should go to Nashville, where I can put 100 per cent toward pursuing my art."

So he did. Brooklyn might be the unofficial indie music capital of the U.S., but it's also saturated with fairly interchangeable young bands struggling to establish themselves.

That's one thing that drew DeWitt, 31, away from Brooklyn and towards Nashville.

"The music business is changing, and that's one of the places that it's maybe changing in a good way," he says.

"In Nashville, there's a strong burden of proof, in terms of having to write songs that have content to them. There are such long lines of songwriters that come from there that really write songs, legit songs. If there's anything that modern music is missing, at the moment, especially hip indie music, are actual songs. So that's one cool thing. You're getting people that are really experimenting with new ways of making music but at the same time understand what it means to tell a narrative using the structure of the song."

Plus, the cost of living down South is just cheaper. "I kept looking around in Brooklyn going, how in the f— are you guys paying for this?" he laughs. "Are we all on trust funds, because I know I'm not. How are you doing this? Just hanging out and being in a band?"

These days, just hanging out and being in a band is pretty much DeWitt's main occupation. In Nashville, he hooked up with multi-instrumentalist Jeremy Bullock to form Wild Cub, a fuzzed-out, synth-pop quintet whose debut album, Youth, dropped earlier this year.

Take note, Brooklyn hipsters

"In Nashville, there's a strong burden of proof, in terms of having to write songs that have content to them."

Wild Cub frontman Keegan DeWitt

Wild Cub might not yet be a household name, but most people are likely familiar with their single Thunder Clatter, an ode to DeWitt's wife. Learning to play well with others hasn't been an entirely seamless transition for DeWitt.

"I think one thing is true that, as the person who has to sing it every night, it's difficult to connect with things that you haven't written the entirety of," he says. "It's like in a play, you can do a certain amount of preparation as an actor, but things really start to take on a dynamic when you interact with somebody else. That's where the drama takes place, and I like to think that some of that is true in terms of me having to collaborate with band members."

That said, DeWitt isn't interested in stealing the show. "I think in general, every year that I get older, the less I desire to be the main person that everyone is looking at."

You don't spend it all in one place, so just where does your money go?

Go figure. Knowing what you're paying out each month will put you in control

GAIL VAZ-OXLADE
Gail blogs daily at gailvazoxlade.com

The average Canadian spends $650 a month on food. ISTOCK

Do you know what you're spending every month? Guess what Statistics Canada says the average Canadian spends a month. Go ahead, guess. No, I'm not going to tell you yet. I want you to figure out what you're spending first, and then I'll give you the averages.

Don't even know where to start? Grab your last month's bank statement(s), credit card statement(s), and line of credit statement(s). Now, break every transaction into one of the following categories:

- Shelter (mortgage, rent, hydro, heat, taxes, maintenance)
- Services (cable, telephone, security, home cleaning, cell, Internet, childcare, health, pets)
- Food (everything you put in your mouth and swallow, including restaurants)
- Shopping (any STUFF you bought for yourself and anyone else — everything!)
- Transportation (car payment, gas, repairs, highway tolls, taxis, bus, train)
- Entertainment (movies, books, magazines, hobbies, gym, club, sports)
- Bank fees (service charges, ATM fees, NSF fees — don't include interest)
- Interest costs (from everywhere)
- Debt repayment (don't worry about splitting out interest and principal, just total all your debt repayment amounts)
- Savings

If you're the average Canadian, according to the Stats man, you're spending (based on 2011 figures) about $1,611 a month to keep a roof over your head, $650 on food, $280 a month on clothes, $936 on transportation (jeez, really?), and $309 on recreation. But those are averages and there's nothing average about YOU so you have to figure out your own numbers to even know where to start with your money management.

Don't want to be bothered spending the time figuring out where your money is going? Then you shouldn't be surprised when you keep on digging yourself into a debt hole. Only when you're ready to put some effort into making things right, will you end up creating a different result.

Most people spend without even thinking about it. When I suggest that you can find the money you need to save or pay down your debt, it isn't a matter of cutting back to the point where you're having no fun at all. But wouldn't it be interesting to see just where the money goes when you're really paying attention?

As our disposable income comes under fire from constantly rising costs and our wants are forced to give way to our needs, it's important we know where every penny is going. The average debt load for households in Canada is up by more than 80 per cent since 1990. And while many of the world's economies and households are reducing their debt levels, in Canada ours continue to climb. Recklessly, we continue to spend money we haven't yet earned. And when our ability to earn hits a bump in the road, if we don't have our expenses under control, the smash-up will be bloody horrible.

If you believe there will always be more money, it's time to wake up and smell the coffee: In January 2012, wages lagged inflation by 0.3 per cent following a six-month period when wages lagged inflation by more than one per cent. So we are falling more and more behind.

You can whine about the economy, bitch about your employment options, worry about money, or you can DO something. That doing means figuring out exactly where your money has been going. Only then can you decide if your money is working the way you want it to. Only then can you take control and make your money work as hard for you as you do for it.

So, are you ready to take control of your money and your life?

Can't Wait To File?

Q When can I file my return?

A I wish everyone was so eager to file. The NETFILE system opened February 10 for electronic filing, so you can hit Send as soon as you are ready. Make sure you have all your T4s and other receipts before you file. If not, you will have to file more paperwork to do an adjustment or the CRA will notice and reassess your return. It may be tempting to file quickly to get your refund, but missing slips will lead to headaches later.

Q I haven't filed a tax return in five years. What is the best way to catch up?

A My advice is to take it one year at a time. And do it now before the CRA sends you a request to file. Start with the oldest year first and work your way forward. Don't get overwhelmed by doing all five years at once. Mail each year when it is ready. Mail is the only option for returns older than 2012. Call the CRA and request any T slips you are missing. Processing will take a little longer but you will receive benefits like the GST/HST retroactively if you qualify.

Enough inspiration for generations to come

Black History Month. Here are three Canadians who have made a huge difference in our country

life@metronews.ca

The list of black Canadians who have changed the country for the better are too many to count. The inventions, human rights progression and inspiration they have provided will be felt for years to come.

Viola Desmond

An activist, Viola Desmond was at the centre of one of Nova Scotia's most controversial civil rights episodes.

In 1946, she refused to leave the white-only section of a theatre in New Glasgow. Her refusal to adhere to the racist policies of the time resulted in her arrest and charges.

This, along with her efforts to combat the province's segregation laws, helped change local legislation, raise awareness and inspire a generation. The Nova Scotia government posthumously pardoned her in 2010.

Lincoln M. Alexander

A Canadian leader who broke race barriers, Lincoln M. Alexander was a statesman whose life and career were a series of groundbreaking firsts in this country.

Elected as Canada's first black member of parliament in 1968, and later appointed lieutenant governor of Ontario, he was an active proponent for equality even when he was at times treated as a second-class citizen in his own country.

Born to a maid and railway porter, he was the first in his family to pursue a post-secondary education and would also become a successful lawyer and community leader.

Elijah McCoy

Elijah McCoy was born in 1844 to former slaves who escaped to Canada from the United States. He studied mechanical engineering in Scotland and became known for inventing and patenting a device that lubricated a train's moving parts while the train was in motion. McCoy, who held more than 50 patents, is also credited with inventing the portable ironing board.

His other contributions go beyond his achievements in engineering. The popular saying "the real McCoy," often used to refer to something authentic compared to a poor imitation, is in reference to him.

Hooray for the home team on Family Day

The severe market crash in October 2008 changed my life. I started running to regain my health, both emotional and physical. Shortly after I took my first steps, I ran the Gobi March in China in June '09, followed by the Atacama Crossing in Chile in '10 and the Sahara Race in Egypt in '11. In this post, I share a lesson about life, learned from the desert.

LESSONS FROM THE DESERT
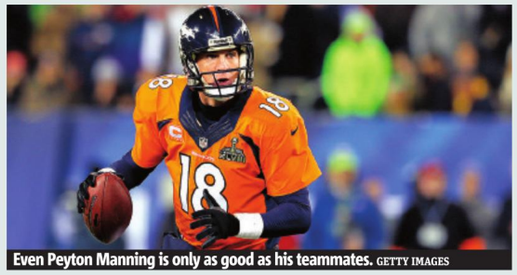
life@metronews.ca

During the one-sided Super Bowl on Feb. 2, commentators repeatedly argued that losing Broncos player Peyton Manning — arguably the best quarterback in the league — was unsuccessful due to an inept offensive line. The massive muscle men of the Denver Broncos were unable to defend him from the charging Seattle Seahawks players.

In football, an offensive line gives a quarterback that precious extra second to complete a pass or a play, allowing the team to score. Without that time, quarterbacks inevitably misthrow or get sacked and teams lose field position. In essence, while it takes a talented quarterback to win, without a strong offensive line, all is lost. Yet, little credit goes to those mostly anonymous five men on the line.



Even Peyton Manning is only as good as his teammates. GETTY IMAGES

Although I ran the Gobi desert alone, dozens of friendly volunteers catered to all the runners' well-being. Back home, I had my own offensive line, one that for six months prior supported and got me to the point where I was able to lace up. My offensive line was fortified with hundreds of financial pledgers, sponsors, well-wishers, my 10 business partners, six medical specialists, two mentors, one trainer and most of all, my family. Each family member, particularly my spouse, took on a greater share of home responsibilities which in turn enabled me to prepare and train adequately so that all that was left to do was to run.

Be it in football or desert running, while leading a big project, or in life, nothing can be accomplished without a strong offensive line. And for many, it starts with family.

Today being Family Day in Ontario, this is the perfect time to acknowledge your offensive line.

Tame workplace mess for less stress

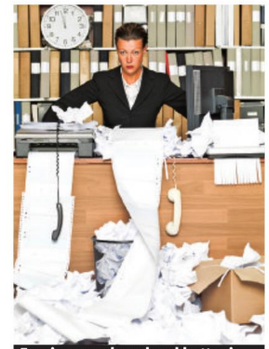
Office life. Tidying up and being tech smart can relieve anxiety

Does your workplace stress you out? It may not be the everyday tasks, projects and deadlines, but rather the physical environment.

Maybe your desk is too messy, or your colleagues are too loud. Perhaps your boss is always looking over your shoulder, the dated technology gives you anxiety or you can't stand the fluorescent lights.

If any of these resonate with you, there's a chance that your physical workplace is affecting your attitude and performance.

According to the recent Connected Workplace report, commissioned by Rogers Communications and conducted by Harris/Decima, 76 per cent of Canadians believe technology helps them to be more efficient and productive at their job.



Earning your bread and butter is easier without the clutter. ISTOCK

And 30 per cent of respondents report that staying connected to their work with mobile technology helps them to enjoy a healthier work/life balance.

Creating a stress-free environment for you and your team can pay off big time. Whether you are an executive, manager or team member, you can have an impact on the stress level of your co-workers by using technology and other techniques.

Here are three ways to do this every day of the week:

Keep your workspace clean and organized. Clear all the clutter around your desk. File away completed projects. Digitize printed documents. Recycle or shred anything that you do not need a copy of.

Use technology. Modern technology has changed the way we do business. There are numerous tools that allow people to collaborate and share from anywhere, like interactive calendaring and video conferencing.

Be a good communicator. Sixty per cent of those surveyed believe smartphones and tablets have a positive effect on workplace communication. Stay productive with file sharing tools and mobile worker solutions and devices.

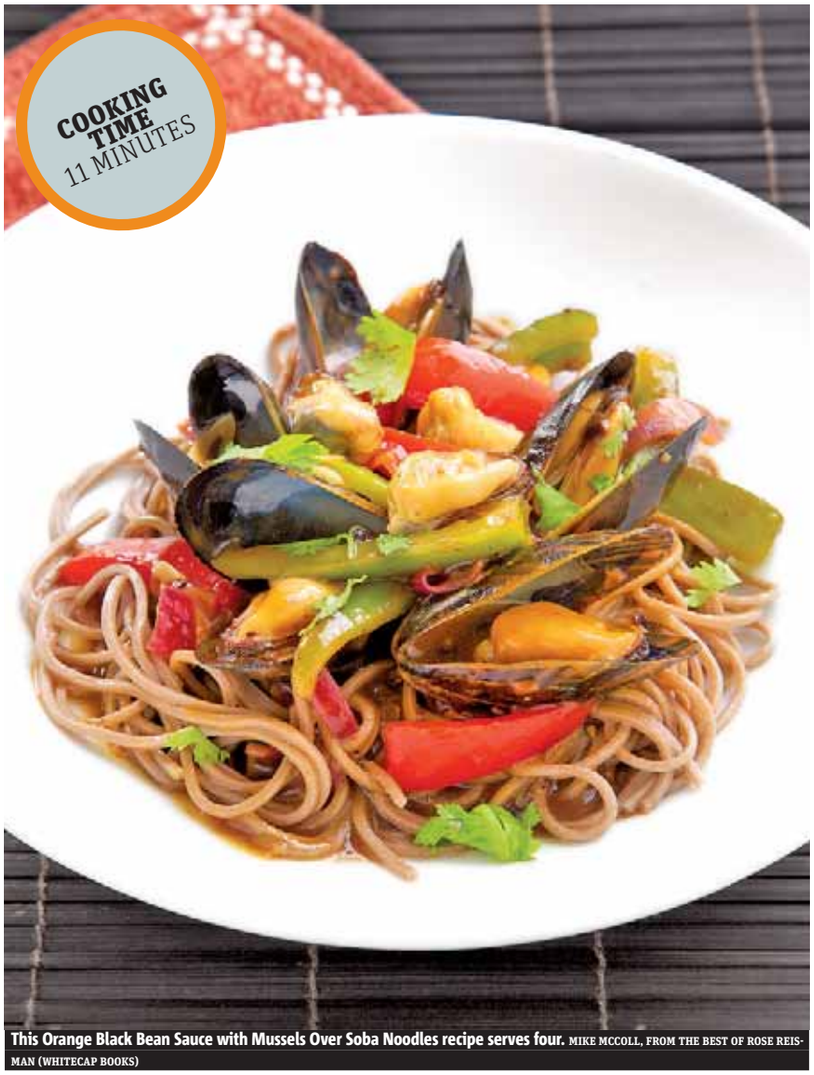
Skip fatty pastas and discover hearty warmth in Mussels over Soba Noodles



This Orange Black Bean Sauce with Mussels Over Soba Noodles recipe serves four. MIKE MCCOLL, FROM THE BEST OF ROSE REISMAN (WHITECAP BOOKS)

FLASH FOOD

From your fridge to your table in 30 minutes or less

During the colder months, there is nothing more comforting than a hearty pasta dish.

But we're all tired of spaghetti with meat sauce and the calories and fat from traditional fettuccine alfredo is just not worth it.

So I decided to take nutritional soba noodles with readily available mussels and make an Asian dish. The combination of flavours makes this dish sensational.

Soba noodles are the Japanese version of pasta but made with buckwheat flour, which gives it the nutty flavour and texture. These noodles contain double the fibre that is in white flour pasta.

Be sure to buy the freshest mussels you can. Mussels contain more than nine times the vitamin B12 of beef and over eight times the iron of chicken. As well, they have more omega-3 fatty acids than all other shellfish. You can substitute clams, shrimp, scallops or squid for the mussels, or try a combination of seafood.

You'll find black bean sauce in the Asian section of your supermarket. It is a rich robust sauce using fermented Chinese black beans, garlic, sugar and soy sauce. Kikkoman makes a great black bean sauce and you use it straight from the bottle. Don't buy fermented black beans, which are too intense for this dish.

You can actually prepare the sauce and vegetables early in the day and complete the recipe just before serving.

I often make the sauce in advance and keep it in the refrigerator for up to a week.

It also is a great dipping sauce for satays or rice paper rolls, but just omit the cornstarch.

This is a quick one-pot dish that gives you your protein, complex carbs and vegetables.

Ingredients

- 1 cup orange juice
- 3 tbsp honey
- 3 tbsp black bean sauce
- 1 1/2 tbsp cornstarch
- 6 oz soba noodles
- 2 tsp vegetable oil
- 1 cup sliced onions
- 1 1/2 cups thinly sliced red bell peppers
- 1 cup thinly sliced green bell peppers
- 1 1/2 tsp minced garlic
- 1 tsp minced ginger
- 2 lb fresh mussels, cleaned
- 1/2 cup chopped fresh cilantro or parsley

Directions

1. Combine the orange juice, honey, black bean sauce and cornstarch and mix until smooth.

2. Bring a pot of water to a boil. Add the soba noodles and boil for 5 minutes until tender. Drain and set aside.

3. In a non-stick wok or large saucepan sprayed with vegetable spray, heat the oil over medium-high heat. Add the onions and cook for 3 minutes or until lightly browned. Add the red peppers, green peppers, garlic and ginger and cook for 3 minutes.

4. Add the sauce and mussels to the vegetables. Cover and cook for about 3 minutes just until mussels open. (Discard any that do not open).

5. On a serving platter, arrange noodles and pour mussel mixture overtop. Garnish with cilantro and serve immediately.

Side dish. Green Mango Red Pepper Salad

Thai menus always feature this sweet and savoury salad. For the traditional version, the key is finding an unripe mango, one that is firm. This offers a crunchy, juicy, tart, sweet and sour taste all in one bite.

But a ripe mango makes for a delicious, sweeter and equally good salad.

This salad is perfect to serve alongside a soba noodle dish.

Ingredients

Salad
- 1 large green (unripe) mango, thinly sliced
- 3/4 cup thinly sliced red bell pepper
- 1/3 cup thinly sliced red onion
- 1/4 cup chopped fresh mint
- 1/4 cup chopped cilantro

Dressing
- 1 tbsp low-sodium soy sauce
- 1 tbsp lime or lemon juice
- 2 tsp sesame oil
- 1 1/2 tsp fish (or oyster) sauce
- 2 tsp brown sugar
- 1 tsp finely chopped jalapeño pepper
- 1/2 tsp finely chopped garlic
- 1/2 tsp finely chopped ginger
- 1/4 cup chopped toasted cashews

1. Salad: place the mango, red pepper, onion, mint and cilantro in a serving bowl.

2. Dressing, whisk together the soy sauce, lime juice, sesame oil, fish sauce and brown sugar in a small bowl. Stir in the jalapeño, garlic and ginger.

3. Pour the dressing over the salad and toss. Garnish with cashews. THE BEST OF ROSE REISMAN (WHITECAP BOOKS) BY ROSE REISMAN

When in Doughty ...

Let Drew do it.

Blue-liner's pair propels Canada past Finns to finish off preliminaries

Canadian forward John Tavares celebrates Drew Doughty's overtime goal against Finland's Tuukka Rask at Bolshoy Ice Dome on Sunday. BRUCE BENNETT/GETTY IMAGES

Team Canada coach Mike Babcock understood that beating Finland in regulation would have meant a favourable quarter-final matchup against either Slovenia or Austria, and he didn't take too kindly to being asked if he would have preferred that.

Not long after needing overtime to beat Finland 2-1 Sunday night at Bolshoy Ice Dome, Babcock leaned into the microphone and sharpened his tone.

"Do you think we didn't try to do that?" he said. "They tried to win, we tried to win."

Babcock looked over at Finnish coach Erkka Westerlund and asked: "You were trying to win, weren't you?"

Westerlund replied simply: "Yes. Congratulations."

The congrats came after Drew Doughty's goal 2:32 into OT and Canada finished atop Group B with eight points. But by failing to win in regulation, the Canadians made their path to a gold medal more difficult, as they'll face either stingy Switzerland or plucky Latvia in the quarter-final Wednesday.

"I think it's hokey when you're trying to pick your spots and trying to avoid teams," Babcock said. "You've got to beat the best to be the best. We came here to be tested, not not to be tested. To win an Olympic gold medal, you should have to battle incredibly hard to make that happen."

As players stepped off the ice, most didn't know what matchup they were getting next. Forward Matt Duchene said upon hearing it would be Switzerland or Latvia, "That's news to me."

"Just strictly play the game," said Doughty, who had both of Canada's goals, including one on the power play 13:44 into the first period. "Just get the win.... We don't care who we face."

Group B

Canada	Finland

The Canadians spent much of the night on the outside of the wider, international ice surface as the Finns clogged up the middle. Even though Canada put 27 shots on Tuukka Rask, many of them were not from prime scoring areas.

That's due in large part to a strong effort from Finland, which made a conscious effort to frustrate Canada's stars accustomed to NHL ice.

"We were trying to keep them outside because the angles are not so good as in the NHL because of the big ice surface," Teemu Selanne said. "I think most of the game we did a good job."

Doughty, whom Los Angeles Kings and Canada teammate Jeff Carter called the most skilled player he has played with, was up for providing the offence. Other than those goals though, the super-talented Canadian forwards struggled to produce much.

Duchene blamed the ice, which is 15 feet wider than in the NHL.

"It's the nature of this game, this international game," he said. "This is why the NHL should never go to a big ice, it'll take the scoring out of the game. You're able to play way more defensive on the big ice."

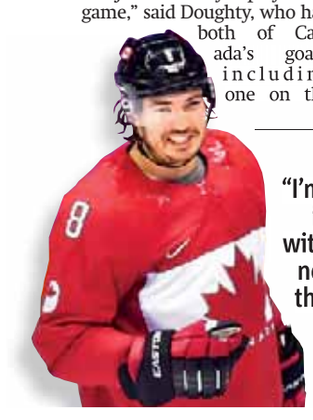
Canada will probably have to do a lot of things better in the coming days to avoid early elimination. If the Canadians get past the quarter-finals, a potential showdown with the unbeaten and impressive Americans awaits in the semi-finals.

There are still plenty of wrinkles to iron out, but forward John Tavares is confident he and his teammates will be ready.

"Ready or not," he said, "we've got to go."

THE CANADIAN PRESS

Drew on cue



"I'm ready to go. I'm used to the ice sheet. I'm used to playing with these guys. I'm just excited now. I forget about everything that's going on around me and I'm just focused on my game and having fun."

Drew Doughty, who is thriving on the larger international ice surface in his second Olympic Games.

Meshed up

A day after Russia had a goal taken away against the U.S. because the net was slightly off its moorings, Canada had a bizarre goal wiped out against Finland.

- Alex Pietrangelo's shot hit Finnish defenceman Ossi Vaananen's stick, popped into the air and landed on top of the net behind Tuukka Rask. Rick Nash swatted the top of the net to dislodge it and it bounced in behind Rask.
- Officials determining it was no goal because of a high-stick. IIHF rules state that a goal is disallowed "if an attacking player contacted the puck with the stick above the crossbar."
- The IIHF case book says "if the player knocked the puck off without a high-sticking infraction and he was not in the goal crease at the moment the puck dropped into the crease, the goal shall be allowed."
- Canada coach Mike Babcock said he thought it would be waved off because "as soon as it's on top of the net, the easy way out is it's no goal."

Canada's Jan Hudec skis in the men's super-G at the Sochi Winter Olympics in Krasnaya Polyana, Russia, Sunday. JONATHAN HAYWARD/THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Bronze medal eases his pain

Super-G. Hudec fields his Olympic dream by reaching podium, the first Canadian alpine skier to do so since 1994

A high pain threshold and the fervent belief he had more to accomplish in ski racing put an Olympic medal around Jan Hudec's neck.

With bone grinding on bone in his right knee and an aching back that had him bedridden just a few weeks ago, the 32-year-old Calgarian won bronze in Sunday's super-G for Canada's first Olympic alpine ski medal since Edi Podivinsky's downhill bronze in 1994.

Seven knee surgeries — six on the right and one on the left, and four of them full-on reconstructions — stalled Hudec's racing career several times between 2003 and 2010.

"It's a story of perseverance and patience and humility sometimes," Hudec said. "A silver lining is bronze today."

Kjetil Jansrud won the fourth straight Olympic super-G gold medal for Norway in a time of one minute 18.14 seconds. Jansrud also won bronze in the downhill. Andrew Weibrecht of the United States was the super-G silver medallist .30 seconds back of Jansrud.

Hudec actually tied for third with American veteran Bode Miller, the oldest alpine skier to medal at 36, in 1:18.67.

The Canadian joked he would rather have shared gold before adding sincerely he wished he shared the podium with one of his teammates.

"As long as they don't give me just half the medal I'm fine with it," Hudec quipped.

THE CANADIAN PRESS

Other Canadian results

Morgan Pridy of Whistler, B.C., was 10th on Sunday and Manuel Osborne-Paradis of Invermere, B.C., tied for 24th.

- Erik Guay of Mont-Tremblant, Que., who was the top Canadian in 10th in the downhill last week, was disqualified from the super-G.

Snowboard cross. Failure fuels Maltais' drive to Sochi success

Dominique Maltais felt the joy of Olympic success eight years ago and the crushing blow of failure four years later.

She used that painful feeling to propel her back to the Olympic podium at the Sochi Games.

Maltais survived a wild semi-final run and came through with a strong effort in the final to win a silver medal Sunday at Rosa Khutor Extreme Park. The performance erased any lingering disappointment from that early exit in Vancouver in 2010.

"I decided to have revenge and show the world how good I can be and how fast I can be on the course," Maltais said. "The last four years I have been improving myself and focusing to get faster on that kind of track just for today.

"I made it happen today so I'm really, really happy."

Eva Samkova of the Czech Republic was dominant in her heats and never trailed in the final. France's Chloe Trespeuch was third.

Defending champion Maëlle Ricker of West Vancouver, B.C., went down in the quarter-finals after trying to make a pass on a turn. She did well just to make it to Sochi after undergoing wrist surgery a few weeks ago.

Maltais won bronze at the Turin Games when snowboard cross made its Olympic debut. She was a contender heading into Vancouver but a training crash left her battered and she didn't advance to the elimination heats.

The 33-year-old rider from Petite-Rivière-St-François, Que., completely changed her routine after the experience with one goal in mind — redemption in Sochi.

Maltais became more proactive in all areas of her snowboarding. She changed her diet, workout regimen and training plans. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Virtue, Moir looking up at rivals after short dance

Tessa Virtue and Scott Moir of Canada compete in the short dance on Sunday in Sochi. BERNAT ARMANGUE/THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The moment the music ended, Scott Moir turned and skipped across the ice, dancing to his own impromptu bit of choreography. He scooped partner Tessa Virtue off her feet and buried his face in her shoulder.

While the moment was exactly what Moir and Virtue had been hoping for, the marks, however, were not.

Canada's defending Olympic ice dance champions finished second in the short dance Sunday at the Sochi Games after laying down a virtually flawless performance.

Scores get thumbs down

Canadian skating fans voiced their outrage on Twitter over what they deemed a large margin of difference between the first- and second-placed teams. The Americans topped Canada's darlings on the technical mark, plus all five component scores.

"That was more like it. I said to Tessa right after we finished, 'That's the skate we'd been having in practice,' and to do that on this stage, it felt pretty good," Moir said.

Virtue, from London, Ont., and Moir, from Ilderton, Ont., scored 76.33 to finish 2.56 points behind American rivals Meryl Davis and Charlie White. Virtue and Moir's mark was more than a point below their season's best. The Americans' mark was a world short program record.

"We sat in the kiss-and-cry and kind of looked at each other and said 'It doesn't matter,' because that was the moment we wanted to have," Virtue said.

When the Americans completed their skate, they also embraced. "We kept in the moment and neither of us was pushing it," White said. "We were out there enjoying each other's company."

Kaitlyn Weaver and Andrew Poje of Waterloo, Ont., were seventh, while Alexandra Paul of Midhurst, Ont., and Mitchell Islam of Barrie, Ont., were 18th, qualifying to move on to Monday's free dance.

Jacobs' shaky start swept under rug

Curling. Canadian men's team finishes round-robin strong, in second place

Brad Jacobs watches as Ryan Harnden, left, and E.J. Harnden sweep in a match against the United States on Sunday. WONG MAYE-E/THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Brad Jacobs' slow start at the Sochi Olympics is a distant memory.

Jacobs' rink from Sault Ste. Marie, Ont., clinched second place in the round-robin of the Olympic men's curling tournament with two wins Sunday, including a 9-8 extra-end victory over China. Jacobs ended the game with a draw to the button on his last stone.

Jacobs' squad finished the round-robin with a 7-2 record.

That's a huge difference from how Canada started, with a shaky win over Germany followed by consecutive losses to Sweden and Switzerland.

"When you come to an Olympics, there is so much hype about gold, gold, gold, gold, gold, especially with the Canadian men's curling team because it is so successful," Jacobs said.

"We kind of let that get to us a little bit so we had to refocus, regroup ... and stay in the present. Forget about the gold medal. It was all mental. It's character-building."

Canada opened Sunday's action with an 8-6 win over the United States.

In the women's draw, Canadian skip Jennifer Jones continued her stellar play, scoring a single on the final throw of the extra end to beat the United States 7-6 on Sunday. The win improved Canada's record to 8-0 and guaranteed the Winnipeg rink the top seed in the playoffs. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Home at heart of Burnett's decision

MLB. Being an hour and a half away from home led right-hander to choose Phillies

A.J. Burnett and the Philadelphia Phillies have completed a contract that guarantees the pitcher $15 million US for 2014 and $22.5 million over two seasons.

A.J. Burnett
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Under the deal finalized Sunday, Burnett would make $33.5 million over two seasons if he makes 30 starts or more in both years.

The 37-year-old, who pitched for Pittsburgh for the last two seasons, chose the Phillies over the Pirates, he said, because of the proximity of the team to his home in Monkton, Md.

"An hour and a half," Burnett said of the commute to Philadelphia from home. "I can drive home and stay in my own house if I want to.... This is the first time in my career I made a decision that wasn't about A.J. Burnett. It was about my wife. It was about my kids." THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

♌ Leo
July 24 - Aug. 23
If you need to make changes to a partnership do so today because once the Sun begins a new cycle tomorrow it won't be so easy. If you negotiate changes now, you won't have to pay too much for them.

♍ Virgo
Aug. 24 - Sept. 23
Loved ones will go along with almost anything you suggest today, but only if you are polite and ask them what they think about it first.

♎ Libra
Sept. 24 - Oct. 23
Are the good times about to end? Will you have to pay for the easy ride you've had in recent weeks? No, but as of tomorrow you may have to make more of an effort to get what takes no effort today.

♏ Scorpio
Oct. 24 - Nov. 22
The good times may have been avoiding you of late but in a matter of days, your luck will improve a hundredfold. The Sun's change of signs tomorrow marks the start of the most dynamic and creative time of the year.

♐ Sagittarius
Nov. 23 - Dec. 21
If you allow others to order you around they will get the impression that you are weak and will make your life a misery every chance they get. Don't let that happen.

♑ Capricorn
Dec. 22 - Jan. 20
The Sun leaves the financial area of your chart tomorrow but you still need to take care of your money. If you let down your guard, someone will try to part you from your cash.

♒ Aquarius
Jan. 21 - Feb. 19
You may try to rush through as many changes as possible before the Sun leaves your sign tomorrow but that would be a mistake. What's done is done and what isn't done by now is probably not worth doing.

♓ Pisces
Feb. 20 - March 20
Your self-confidence may have taken a dive in recent weeks but when the Sun moves into your sign tomorrow you will get the lift you need and soon you'll soar. SALLY BROMPTON
